

The Hengstforder Mühle (mill)

This is the Hengstforder wind mill in Apen which stands next to the Aper Tief (a river). It was used to grind flour from local cereals. Today it is a popular sight for tourists.

1937

today

The bascule to Aperberg

1937

In 1937 the bridge was used to cross the river and she could fold up so that large ships could sail under the bridge.

today

Now we have a new brige, which can't fold up but looks pretty.

Peat Cutting in Apen

today

1937

In Apen there was a bog, from which a lot of peat was cut mainly as burning material for homes and factories. Today, the bog is a nature reserve.

The Heeren-Wehren-Brücke (bridge)

This bridge is called the Heeren-Wehren-Brücke and spans the large Süderbäke. As in the past, it still is a wooden bridge, which is often used by pedestrians and bikers. It is located on the eastern edge of Apen.

1940

today

Zwischenahner Meer (a lake)

This lake, which is more than three kilometres across, is a rather popular destination for tourists and residents. You can go surfing, boating, and fishing, and you can relax on the small beach in the town of Bad Zwischenahn.

today

1937

Möhlenbült (a lake)

This lake was once a swimming lake. Because of climate change, the lake has been drying out for the last decades. Today it is just a little puddle, through which people are riding their horses. And you are not allowed to swim there anymore.

today

1969

